Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a retractable pet leash and, more particularly, to such a pet leash having a high visibility signal or transceiver. 2. Description of the Related Art Leashing animals in public places with conventional leashes is usually not possible due to the lack of public facility space. Moreover, animals that become accidentally separated from the owner may become lost and injured. Various devices and methods have been used to aid in the recovery of lost animals. An exemplary prior art device is found in U.S. Pat. No. 4,930,557, issued to Shelba Flynn (hereinafter "Shelba") on Jun. 5, 1990, which discloses a method and apparatus for locating a lost pet. In the '557 patent, a transmitter is buried inside the collar of a pet which is recovered. A receiving unit is hidden and carried by the owner. If the pet is lost, the owner carries the receiving unit to a central monitoring station and a signal is broadcast by the transmitter of the pet. An employee of the central monitoring station listens for the signal of the transmitting unit and then phones the owner to locate the missing pet. Upon locating the pet, the transmitter is activated by pressing a button on the receiver to alert the owner of the location of the pet. If the transmitter of the pet is activated by the owner of the pet, the transmitter is turned on and another signal is broadcast which contains an unique identification number that can be used by law enforcement agencies to track the owner's pet. Although the method and apparatus of the '
